The Missing Children in Public Discourse on Child Sexual Abuse Ph.D., LICSW Jane F. Gilgun

This article shows that public discourse on child sexual abuse leads to policies and programs that focus on punishment and incapacitation of perpetrators, but neglects child survivors and their families. Survivors often have no one to talk to and families are on their own to figure out what to do.

Survivors suffer needlessly. It's time for the general public to press for much needed concern, legislation, and programs for child, teen, and adult survivors
